EXCITING NEW BOOK REVEALS THE DANGERS OF EVERYDAY CONVERSATION -- THE NEED OF SELF-EXPRESSION IS JUST AS NECESSARY FOR SURVIVAL AS FOOD AND WATER

Rockford-Chicago, IL -- October 30, 2006 – (BlackPR.com) PFTH Publishing (www.pfthpublishing.com) announced the publication of a new book “Dangerous Conversations.” This new book by a new author, Pamela T. Murphy is the first of a series of books that deal with the devastation that is caused in relationships by innocent everyday conversation. It touches on all phases of relationship issues, from friendship to jealousy, from love to hate, deceit, infidelity, obsession confused with love and the effects of life and death.

“This book is about the need of every individual to feel love, acceptance and have the ability to show self-expression with the ones they have a relationship with and without this need being met within that relationship, it will be met by someone else or something else,” says author Murphy.

“I chose to write on this subject because conversation/communication is the beginning and ending to everything with human beings. The effect has to be extraordinary, due to its inexistence would have created an entirely different population, a different time than what we currently know. The need to effectively communicate is just as necessary for survival as food and water. In order to survive in a peaceful setting we must find a common ground for communication in order to have a feeling of acceptance and appreciation,” adds Murphy.

Topics in “Dangerous Conversations” include:

- Betrayal of friendship
- Divorce
- Infidelity
- Teenage depression
- Parenting-expectations & perceptions
- Obsession vs. love
- Fantasy vs. reality
- The thin line between love and hate
- Expectations and perception
- Hiding behind the mask of fear and pride
- Self acceptance and redemption

“An easy read and makes you think about everyday conversations,” says Virginia Givens, Team member of MedPlan Partners.

“A thought provoking and intriguing novel that reveals just how potent words are and I can’t wait for the second book to see what happens next,” says Latoya White of Rubluff Development.
