

This book puts a magnifying glass on the issue of how many people in today's society, especially women, are living their life with no enthusiasm or passion. How people no longer have dreams and have become consumed with sex, money and mischief, while living just for today. It's like being frozen in time; people have become heartless as if they were manikins, mere outer skeletons of human beings. The irony of the story is although these characters go through life's ups and downs of experiencing their heart aches and they feel as if their thrill is gone, it's just that a feeling. The reality is, feelings come and go, if one has the faith of a mustard seed and just hold on, the same distance it takes to give up is the same distance it takes to keep going. Through the gift of unconditional love that is found sometimes only in the event of losing, these characters get a chance at life and to win in the game of love and eventually they get their thrill back.

BOOK REVIEW

“The author, Pamela T. Murphy, has a unique style that brings her fictional characters to life. I sensed the joys and pains of these characters. Their fictional situations became real as I explored their lives it gave me insight into my own as an African American woman. The challenges we face daily professionally and romantically are addressed in this book. I felt relieved to feel that I am not alone. Ms. Murphy has displayed the ability to turn tragedy to triumph. This book renews hope for the healing and happiness of the hearts and souls of African American men and women,” says Chana Payne, Masters Degree in Education.
